

GEORGE ROUY

b. 1994, Sittingbourne, Kent, UK. Lives and works in Faversham, UK.

George Rouy is recognised as a leading figure in a new generation of international painters. His dynamic and signature use of the human figure - vexed with desire, freedom, alienation and crisis - speaks to the extremities of our time. Focused on the relationship between interior landscapes and the body in motion, Rouy's approach to the body - and his pursuit of painting - is one of contradiction, harmony, and perpetual transformation. Bodies, captured alone and at times gathered in quiet pairs or imprisoned in crowds of amorphous energy, move from diminuendo, absorption and poise to expansive forces of crescendo, incitement and charge. Together they present rhapsodic portraits of identity in a globalised and technologically-driven 21st century, alluding to recurring themes of the face as a mask, the individual as a copy and the self as a shadow. This bold and subversive corporeal language - constrained and liberated - captures the grave and arrested beauty of our contemporary moment.
